From kerosene lamps and power amps to thumb drives and leather footwear, goods used by people around the world have long been made in Singapore. The National Museum of Singapore is celebrating the country's fruitful yet lesser-known manufacturing history with an exhibition of objects that were once or are currently produced there. Titled 50 Made-in-Singapore Products, the exhibition showcases a diverse array of locally crafted items, including Rollei cameras, Quansen crocodile bags, Bata sneakers and Setron televisions. Hosted by the National Heritage Board, the show is part of a Singapore-wide celebration of the country's Golden Jubilee, the focal point of which is Jubilee Weekend (Aug. 7-10).
